EFFRAYANT, E [ə-frè-yan, t] adj. frightful; dreadful; appalling; terrible; tremendous.

D'une manière —e, frightfully; dreadfully; terribly; tremendously.

S.m. — EFFRAYANT, ÉPOUNTABLE, EFFROYABLE, TERRIBLE. Of these words, terrible differs from the first three in that it is sometimes used in a good sense, and implies a fear mingled with respect and awe. We speak of an frightful (appalling) cry, an epouvantable (dreadful) noise, an effroyable (horrible) monster, a terrible (terrible) God.

Effrayant and épouvantable imply the presence of something that inspires fear; effroyable, that of an object which produces horror; while terrible may be used in the absence of the exciting cause. The stone is a terrible (terrible) disease; its punge are effroyables (horrible); the operation is épouvantable (dreadful) to witness; the mere preparations for it are effrayantes (appalling).

Cela s'entend, be it understood; § it being understood; of course; § to be sure.

Syn. — ENTENDRE, COMPRENDRE, CONCEVOIR. Entendre has reference to what is said — to the time in which one speaks, the turn of a phrase; the precise meaning of an expression; comprendre is applied to principles, lessons, and speculative knowledge in general; concevoir is employed in connection with forms, arrangements, projects, and plans. We entendons (understand) languages; we comprendons (comprehend) sciences; we concevons (conceive) ideas connected with the arts. It is difficult to entendre (understand) what is obscure, to comprendre (comprehend) what is abstract, to concevoir (conceive) what is confused.

Syn. — ENTENDRE, ÉCOUTER, OÛIR. Entendre (to hear) is to receive the impression of sounds; écouter (to listen) is to give ear, to attend carefully in order to entendre (hear). Oûir differs from entendre in that it denotes a more indefinite sensation. We have sometimes ouï (heard) persons speak, without having entendu (understood) what they said. It is often expedient to pretend that one has not entendu (heard) an offensive remark. It is dishonorable to concevoir (listen) to a private conversation. To answer appropriately, it is necessary to have ouï (heard) distinctly.

ENTENDRE, v. n. 1. || to hear; 2. (à, to) to attend; to pay attention; 3. (à) to acquiesce (in); to approve (of); to consent (to); 4. (que, [subj.]) to require (to); to expect (to); to mean (for a. o. to); to intend (for a. o. to).

4. J'entends qu'on fasse bien tout ce qu'on fait, require, mean, expect, intend every thing that is done to be done well.

[The pa. p., ÊTE, does not admit of change in termination.]

Syn.—ÊTRE, EXISTER, SUBSISTER. Être is applicable to all kinds of actions, qualities, substances, and relations, and to all varieties of being, whether real or ideal; it generally denotes the existence of some modification or property in its subject. Exister is used with substances only; it indicates actual être (being), and nothing more. Subsister is applied with equal propriety to both substances and relations, but conveys an allusion to the duration of their existence which is foreign to the meaning of the other two words. Vivre, to (be) in; to exist; the phoenix exists (exists) no longer; all human institutions subsist (subsist) but for a time.

Son. — FACTION, PARTI. These terms denote in common the union of several persons, and their opposition to views differing from their own; but parti conveys no other idea than that of division of opinion, while faction is always used in a bad sense, and implies secret machinations. The friends of Cæsar at first formed a faction (faction); but so on, increasing in strength, they threw off the veil of secrecy, and became the dominant parti (party) of the state.

Syn.—FAIM, APPÉTIT. Faim (hunger) has reference merely to the want of food, whether it proceeds from long abstinence or natural voracity. Appétit (appetite) has more connection with taste and has its origin not only in the requirements of the stomach, but also in the pleasure that is received from eating what is palatable. The first is more pressing, but is sometimes satisfied with little; the last wants more patiently, but demands a greater variety and abundance. Any dish will appease faim (hunger), while there is none that can excite it. The appétit (appetite) is more delicate; it is not satisfied with every dish, and may be provoked by ragaits.

See — FAUTE, PÉCHÉ, DÉLIT, CRIME, PÉVAT. La faute (faul) is the violation of the rules of duty, and has its origin in the weakness of human nature. The peche (ein) is a transgression of the divine law, and proceeds from a disregard of the precepts of religion. The délit (misdeemeanor) involves a breach of the civil law, and is the result of disobedience to the powers that be, or the statutes they have made. The crime and the forfait (both of which may be translated by the word crime) are transgressions at once of the human and the divine code, and spring from the wickedness of the heart; with this sole difference between them, that forfait indicates the greater offence, and the more unmitigated depravity. Indolence and indulgence in passion are fautes (faul); lying and swearing are pechés (sins); duelling and smuggling are délits (misdeemeanors); house-breaking and forging are crimes (crimes); arson and murder are forfaits (heinous crimes).

[GENS is m. in all its senses except the first. In this it may be of either gender; it is m. when the adj. follows; f. when the adj. precedes. When Tout, all, certain, some, quel, what, and Tout, each, precede it immediately, or when Tout, all, is separated from it by an article only, they agree with it in the f.; but they agree with it in the m., if the adj. does not immediately precede it or does not vary in the f. gender. V. Ex. 1.]

Syn. — GENS, PERSONNES. Gens indicates a number of people indefinitely, as persons does one individual body; personnes denotes them individually, and admits of the modifications of number and gender. There are many distinguished gens (people) at court; we are acquainted with two personnes (persons) that are in high favor there. We see many gens (people) in the streets; we are intimate with but few of the personnes (persons) whom we meet.

— comme un clocher §, as tall as a poplar-tree, church-steeple. A la —, in grand style. Devenir —, plus —, (F. senses) to grow tall.

[Grand precedes the n. except in the expression UN HOMME GRAND, a tall man, in contradiction to UN GRAND HOMME, a great man. With certain nouns such as CROISS, MÊS, PÊTÉ, PÊTÉ, PÊTÉ, PÊTÉ, PÊTÉ, etc., GRAND becomes the f. GRAND. V. these words. GRAND preceding a vowel or an h mute is pronounced grân.]

Syn. — GRAND, ENORME, ATROCE. These epithets are used to mark different degrees of crime. The first implies greatness; the second, excess beyond others of the same class; the last, detestable cruelty, and aggravating circumstances of every kind. Nero, putting to death a tutor to whom he owed much, committed a grand (great) crime. Tullia, conspiring for the murder of her father, and driving her chariot over his lifeless remains, perpetrated an enorme (enormous) crime; but the guilt of both of these was surpassed by the atrocious (atrocious) crime of Caracalla, who held with satisfaction his own brother put to death by his order in the arms of their common mother.

Syn. — Haine, aversion, antipathie, répugnance. Haine (hatred) is a voluntary emotion proceeding from the passion or resentment of an irritated heart. Aversion (aversion) and antipathy (antipathy) are less under one's control, and have their origin in the temperament or taste; with this distinction, that the reasons for one's aversion may be discovered and explained, while antipathy is the effect of secret and inexplicable causes. Repugnance is not, like the three words we have considered, a permanent feeling; it is rather a transient emotion, called into being by peculiar circumstances, and terminating with them.

HYPOCRITE [i-po-kri-ti] adj. hypocritical; ¶ false-faced.

HYPOCRITE, n. m. f. hypocrite.

Syn. —, HYPOCRITE, CAFARD, CAGOT, BIGOT. The hypocrite affects to be religious in order to conceal his vices; the cafard, for the purpose of advancing his interests; the cagot plays the part of piety that his wicked deeds may escape unpunished; the bigot is strict in going through the least important forms and ceremonies of religion, with the view of escaping its real duties. With the first, devotion is a mask; with the second, a lure; with the third, a profession; with the last, a livery. The hypocrite is like an angel of darkness which transforms itself into an angel of light. The cafard finds a fitting type in Simon the magician, who wished to purchase the gifts of the Holy Ghost, to carry a with them a lucrative trade. The cagot resembles the Pharisee who lengthened his face that he might do an injury to his neighbor and escape unpunished. We recognize the bigot in the carnal Jew, who would have satisfied the law with external ceremonial observances.

— Son —, justice, équité. Justice (justice) does not conform to the written law which we are bound to obey and make the basis of our decisions: équité (equity) implies obedience to the law in our hearts and consciences; it allows circumstances to modify its conformity with prescribed statutes, and decides by its own sense of right and wrong. All sentences which the law pronounces are justes (just), but équité (equity) is sometimes violated, and leads us to oppose their execution. An irreligious father, incoherent at the piety of his son, disinherits him; justice (justice) must confirm the act, but équité (equity) leaves no means untried to set aside the unnatural testament, and restore to the son his rightful portion.

LEPRE [lê-pr] n. f. 1. (med.) leprosy; 2. + § leprosy. — des juifs, (med.) leprosy. En —, leprously.
Syn. — LEPRE, LANNERIS. Lepre (leprosy) is a generic term, including all types and variations of the disease; lanneris indicates an advanced stage of the malady in which the body is covered with ulcers or scales. The former is applicable to the human race alone; the latter is equally applicable to animals. Figuratively, lepre may be admitted into the most elevated style; thus we speak of the lepre (leprosy) of sin. Lanneris in its figurative significance belongs rather to the familiar style, and denotes an extreme of sordid aversion.

ODEUR [o-deür] n. f. 1. odor; smell; 2. odor; perfume; scent; 3. odoriferousness; fragrance.

— aromatique, 1. aromatic odor; 2. odoriferousness; fragrance; bonne —, good = smell; — désagréable, bad, disagreeable, naughty, offensive, unpleasant = smell; mauvaise —, bad, disagreeable, naughty, offensive, unpleasant = smell; stench; — suave, sweet, aror.

Boîte d'—, scent-bottle; flacon d'—, scent-bottle; smelling-bottle. De bonne —, sweet-scented; sweet-smelling; sans —, without an = smell; scentsless.

Être en bonne, en mauvaise —, to be in good, bad odor, reputation; to have a good, bad name; respirer une —, to inhale an =

Syn. — ODEUR, SENTEUR. The idea conveyed in common by these words is that of an exhalation perceptible to the sense of smell. The odeur, however, may be so slight as not to be actually perceived, while the senteur must always be sufficiently strong to make an impression on the sense in question. Close examination will prove that almost all bodies have some odeur; there are comparatively few that are distinguished by senteur.

ODIEUSEMENT [o-di-é-sé-màn] adv. 1. odiously; hatefully; 2. invidiously.

ODIEUX, SE [o-di-é-sé, sé-a] adj. (A, B) 1. odious; hateful; 2. loathsome; 3. obnoxious; 4. invidious.

ODIEUX [o-di-é-sé] n. m. 1. odium; odiousness; 2. obnoxiousness; 3. invidiousness.

Syn. — ODIUM, HAISABLE. The first of these terms is much stronger than the second. If that which is haisable is worthy of hate, what is odieux deserves all our hatred concentrated in the highest degree. The impatient or contradictory person is a haisable (hateful) object to his acquaintances; the more drier, the robber, is odieux (odious) to all.

ODOMÈTRE [o-do-mè-tr] n. m. odometer; surveying-wheel; way-wiser; pedometer; perambulator.

ODONTAGRE [o-dón-ta-gr] n. f. (med.) odontagra (pain in the teeth caused by rheumatism or gout).

ODONTOLOGIE [o-dón-to-lo-ji] n. f. (did.) odontology.

ODORANT, E [o-do-rán, t] adj. odoriferous; sweet-scented; sweet-smelling.

Syn. — ODOURANT, ODOREURANT. Odorant denotes simply that which has an odor; odoreur is applied to what not only has an odor but diffuses it more or less widely through the surrounding atmosphere. The scent of odorant (odorous) substances may be perceived when they are brought close to the nostrils; odoreur (odoriferous)
